. . . . “He knows how to turn out verses that charm.”—London Academy.

“His verse has imagination, strength and poetic insight; it has also the qualities of music and rhythm.”—Mail and Empire.

“Mr. Scott's work is in a higher strain, and in part remarkable. . . . [Referring to ‘Samson’]: These are splendid verses, and this is probably the best American poem for many years.”—London Speaker.

THE UNNAMED LAKE.

THE UNNAMED LAKE.

It sleeps among the thousand hills
Where no man ever trod,
And only nature's music fills
The silences of God.

Great mountains tower above its shore,
Green rushes fringe its brim,
And o'er its breast for evermore
The wanton breezes skim.

Dark clouds that intercept the sun
Go there in Spring to weep,
And there, when Autumn days are done,
White mists lie down to sleep.

Sunrise and sunset crown with gold
The peaks of ageless stone,
Where winds have thundered from of old
And storms have set their throne.

No echoes of the world afar
Disturb it night or day,
But sun and shadow, moon and star,
Pass and repass for aye.

'Twas in the grey of early dawn,
When first the lake we spied,
And fragments of a cloud were drawn
Half down the mountain side.

Along the shore a heron flew,
And from a speck on high,
That hovered in the deepening blue,
We heard the fish-hawk's cry.

Among the cloud-capt solitudes,
No sound the silence broke,
Save when, in whispers down the woods,
The guardian mountains spoke.

Through tangled brush and dewy brake,
Returning whence we came,
We passed in silence, and the lake
We left without a name.

A DREAM OF THE PREHISTORIC.

Naked and shaggy, they herded at eve by the sound of the seas,
When the sky and the ocean were red as with blood from the battles of God,
And the wind like a monster sped forth with its feet on the rocks and the trees,
And the sands of the desert blew over the wastes of the drought-smitten sod.

Here, mad with the torments of hunger, despairing they sank to their rest,
Some crouching alone in their anguish, some gathered in groups on the beach;
And with tears almost human the mother looked down at the babe on her breast;
And her pain was the germ of our love, and her cry was the root of our speech.

Then a cloud from the sunset arose, like a cormorant gorged with its prey,
And extended its wings on the sky till it smothered the stars in its gloom,
And ever the famine-worn faces were wet with the wind-carried spray,
And dimly the voice of the deep to their ears was a portent of doom.

And the dawn that rose up on the morrow, apparelled in gold like a priest,
Through the smoke of the incense of morning, looked down on a vision of death;
For the vultures were gathered together and circled with joy to their feast
On hearts that had ceased from their sorrow, and lips that had yielded their breath.

Then the ages went by like a dream, and the shoreline emerged from the deep,
And the stars as they watched through the years saw a change on the face of the earth;
For over the blanket of sand that had covered the dead in their sleep
Great forests grew up with their green, and the sources of rivers had birth.

And here in the after-times, man, the white-faced and smooth-handed, came by,

And he built him a city to dwell in and temples of prayer to his God;
He filled it with music and beauty, his spirit aspired to the sky,
While the dead by whose pain it was fashioned lay under the ground that he trod.

He wrenched from great Nature her secrets, the stars in their courses he named;
He weighed them and measured their orbits, he harnessed the horses of steam;
He captured the lightnings of heaven, the waves of the ocean he tamed,—
And ever the wonder amazed him as one that awakes from a dream.

But under the streets and the markets, the banks and the temples of prayer,
Where humanity laboured and plotted, or loved with an instinct divine,
Deep down in the silence and gloom of the earth that had shrouded them there
Were the fossil remains of a skull and the bones of what once was a spine.

Enfolded in darkness forever, untouched by the changes above,
And mingled as clay with the clay which the hands of the ages had brought,
Were the hearts in whose furnace of anguish was smelted the gold of our love,
And the brains from whose twilight of instinct has risen the dawn of our thought.

But the law, that was victor of old with its heel on the neck of the brute,
Still tramples our hearts in the darkness; still grinds down our face in the dust;
We are sown in corruption and anguish—whose fingers will gather the fruit?
Our life is but lent for a season—for whom do we hold it in trust?

In the vault of the sky overhead, in the gulfs that lie under our feet,
The wheels of the universe turn and the laws of the universe blend;
The pulse of our life is in tune with the rhythm of forces that beat
In the surf of the furthest star's sea, and are spent and regathered to spend.

Yet we trust in the will of the Being whose fingers have spangled the night
With the dust of a myriad worlds, and who speaks in the thunders of space;

Though we see not the start or the finish, though vainly we cry for the light,
Let us mount in the glory of manhood and meet the God-Man face to face.

EOTHEN.

The immortal spirit hath no bars
 To circumscribe its dwelling place;
My soul hath pastured with the stars
 Upon the meadow-lands of space.

My mind and ear at times have caught,
 From realms beyond our mortal reach,
The utterance of Eternal Thought,
 Of which all nature is the speech.

And high above the seas and lands,
 On peaks just tipped with morning light,
My dauntless spirit mutely stands
 With eagle wings outspread for flight.

A REVERIE.

O tender love of long ago,
 O buried love, so near me still
On tides of thought that ebb and flow,
 Beyond the empire of the will;
To-night with mingled joy and pain
I fold thee to my heart again.

And down the meadows, dear, we stray,
 And under woods still clothed in green,
Though many Springs have passed away
 And many harvests there have been,
Since through the youth-enchanted land
We wandered idly hand in hand.

Then every brook was loud with song,
 And every tree was stirred with love,
And every breeze that passed along
 Was like the breath of God above;—
And now to-night we go the ways
We went in those sweet summer days.

Dear love, thy dark and earnest eyes
 Look up as tender as of yore,
And, purer than the evening skies,
 Thy cheeks have still the rose they wore;
I—I have changed but thou art fair
And fresh as in life's morning air.

What little hands these were to chain
 So many years a wayward heart;
How slight a girlish form to reign
 As queen upon a throne apart,
In a man's thought, through hopes and fears,
And all the changes of the years.

Dear girl, behold, thy boy is now
A man and grown to middle age,
The lines are deep upon his brow,
His heart hath been grief's hermitage;
But hidden where no eye can see
His boyhood's love still lives for thee,—

Still blooms above thy grave to-day,
Where death hath harvested the land,
Though such long years have passed away
Since down the meadows hand in hand
We went with hearts too full to know
How deep their love was long ago.

SONG'S ETERNITY.

Little bird on dewy wing
 In the dawn of day,
All the pretty songs you sing
 Pass away.
For although man's heart is stirred
 By your happy voice,
You can only sing one word,—
 "Rejoice," "Rejoice."

But the music poets make
 Is a deathless strain,
For they do from sorrow take,
 And from pain,
Such a sweetness as imparts
 Joy that never dies,—
And their songs live in men's hearts
 Beyond the skies.

LOST LOVE.

Love has gone a-straying,
Like a cloud in May,
Down the silent wind-ways,
Past the bounds of day.
When will he return again?
When will his fire burn again?
I am broken-hearted,
Since sweet Love departed.

Love has gone a-straying—
Call him back to me,
Up the silent wind-ways,
Over land and sea.
Tell him he must bring again
Joys that I can sing again;
I am broken-hearted,
Since sweet Love departed.

Love has gone a-straying—
Foolish, foolish Love,
Seeking up the wind-ways
For the stars above;
Tell him here are flowers as fair,
Tell him here are hours as rare,
While the earth is dressed in spring
And the merry birds do sing,
And the brooks and rivers run
Laughing at the staid old sun;
Call Love home again,—
Bid him not roam again,—
I am broken-hearted,
Since sweet Love departed.

BURIED LOVE.

Love hath built himself a house
Underneath the snow,
Where, amid the winters storm,
He can keep his body warm,
When the winds do blow.

It is lined with leaves that fell
Half a year ago,
And around it linger yet
Odours of spring violet,
Underneath the snow.

If you come and try to peep
Into what's below,
Laughing loud, as if in fun,
Love jumps up and makes you run,
Pelting you with snow.

What does Love do night and day?
Would you like to know?
In the dark he sits and weeps
For a little maid that sleeps—
Sleeps beneath the snow.

And when spring shall come again
And the warm winds blow,
Tears have made his sight so dim
That the world will seem to him
Buried still in snow.

TO A FLY IN WINTER.

Good day, little Fly,
Here we are—you and I,
 The children of summer;
Warm your wings at the fire,
Take what food you desire,
Your Lordship I'll hire
 As my fifer and drummer.

Outside the winds blow,
And the fast falling snow
 From the gables is drifting;
The clouds seem to me
Like an overturned sea
Lashing field, fence and tree,
 Never breaking or lifting.

Tune up, little Friend,
Tell me winter will end,
 And the spring-time is coming;
When the buds with surprise
Will rub their young eyes
And look up to the skies,
 At thy fifing and drumming.

Sing me carols of May,
And of June and the hay,
 With the sweet-smelling clover;
Of the soft winds that creep
Round my bed as I sleep,
When the dawn lights the deep,
 And the long night is over.

Sing me songs of the brook
Where the little fish look

Up, with eyes full of wonder,
At the wind-shaken screen
Of the willows that lean
Over pools that are green
 As the boughs they sleep under.

Tune up, little Friend,
For the winter will end,—
 Be my fifer and drummer;
And thy one song repeat,
Till its buzz and the heat
Give my dreaming the sweet
 Taste of meadows and summer.

SUNRISE.

O rising Sun, so fair and gay,
What are you bringing me, I pray,
Of sorrow or of joy to-day?

You look as if you meant to please,
Reclining in your gorgeous ease
Behind the bare-branched apple-trees.

The world is rich and bright, as though
The pillows where your head is low
Had lit the fields of driven snow.

The hoar-frost on the window turns
Into a wood of giant ferns
Where some great conflagration burns.

And all my childhood comes again
As lightsome and as free from stain
As those frost-pictures on the pane.

I would that I could mount on high
And meet you, Sun—that you and I
Had to ourselves the whole wide sky.

But here my poor soul has to stay,
So tell me, rising Sun, I pray,
What are you bringing me to-day?

What shall this busy brain have thought;
What shall these hands and feet have wrought;
What sorrows shall the hours have brought,

Before thy brilliant course is run,
Before this new-born day is done,
Before you set, O rising Sun?

AMONG THE SPRUCES.

'Tis sweet, O God, to steal away,
Before the morning sun is high,
Upon some frosty winter's day,
When not a cloud is on the sky,
And all the world is white below,
Knee-deep with freshly fallen snow,—

To steal into the silent woods
Before the trees are quite awake,
And watch them in their snowy hoods
A rough-and-ready toilet make,
When in the little breezes creep
And rouse them gently from their sleep.

'Tis sweet, O God, to kneel among
The snow-bent trees, and lift the mind
Above the boughs where birds have sung,
Above the pathways of the wind,
Into the very heart of space,—
To where the angels see Thy face.

And as my spirit mounts in prayer,
So keen becomes its mystic sight,
That through the sunshine in the air
I see a new and heavenly light,
And all the bowed woods seem to be Acknowledging the Trinity.

THE EXCEEDING BITTER CRY.

JANUARY, 1897.

From the lands burnt dead with sunshine, where our fathers fought and bled,
And have reaped a golden harvest, comes a cry to us for bread;
For the millions, famine-stricken, starve and sicken in despair,
And the glazing eyes of famine see the vultures in the air.

Shall we shut up human pity? Shall they cry to us in vain?
Shall we sate ourselves with plenty, while they perish in their pain?
Can we kneel and say "Our Father,"—can our spirits hope for rest,
While the babe lies dead from starving on its starving mother's breast?

They are black,—but they are brothers, and they suffer pain as we,
And the four great winds of heaven bring their death-cries o'er the sea;
They are black,—but they are brothers, and the flag of England stands
Where the dead forms, drawn together, dry and whiten on the sands.

Lion-blooded sons of England, breathing glory as your breath,
Up and gird you now, my brothers, for a giant strife with death;
By the flag we guard unsullied, by the God that reigns above,
Rise and bind our mighty empire with the bands of human love.

AT THE CROSS ROADS.

Here on life's Cross Roads, friend, our ways now sever,
And each must journey 'neath an altered sky,
Yet in the years to come our hearts will never Forget the glad hours of the days gone by.

Of have we sat before the bright logs blazing
On the wide hearth, and closed the winter's day;
Of in the meadows, where the cows were grazing,
Have watched the summer sunsets die away.

Of have we sped, girt with the engine's thunder,
Down the bright track into the golden dawn;
Of through dark forests when the moon, in wonder,
Peered 'neath the trees at the long smoke outdrawn.

And now when autumn fields are filled with beauty,
And while the breath of harvest is so sweet,
We who have heard afar the voice of duty,
Shake hands and part where these two roadways meet.

Dear brother heart, we leave farewells unspoken,
We shall not change nor can our love forget,
For on life's sky, by sun and shadow broken,
True friendship is a star that does not set.

A SONG OF TRIUMPH.

Ye tempests that sweep o'er the deep, heavy-browed with the cloud of the rain,
Assemble in wonder with thunder and bellowing voice of the main,
With the roar that comes forth from the North when the ice-peaks roll down to the sea,
And the dream of the gleaming white silence is hoarse with waves' laughter and glee;—
Yea, gather, ye tempests, on wings, with the strings of God's harp in your hands,
And your voices upraise in the praise of the Lord of the seas and the lands.

Sing the triumph of Man, who began in the caves where the waves lay asleep,
In a cradle made green by the sheen of the sunlight that smote on the deep,
When the ages were young and the tongue of the universe sounded its praise,
Over the dismal, abysmal, dark voids where God went on His ways
To crown His creations with nations of flowering and animate life:—
Implanting a germ in the worm that would grow to His image through strife.

The jungles that spread on the bed of the plain, where the rain and the snow
Came down from the mountains a river, to shiver in torrents below,
Were alight with the bright coloured snakes and the tigers that lurked for their prey,
While the bird that was heard in the boughs had a plumage more splendid than day,
But the lord at whose word all were humbled was Man who in majesty came;
Immortal as God and who trod with his body erect as a flame.

Let the praise of Man's form by the storm be outrolled to the gold of the West,
To the edge of the ledge of the clouds where the sun marches down to his rest.
For out of the rout of fierce famine, of warfare and hunger and strain,
Man's body was fashioned and passioned in frenzy of fury and pain.
He goes with his face upon space, like a god he is girded with might,
His desire is the fire of a star that illumines a limitless night.

His love is above and beneath him, a mountain and fountain of fire,
In his blood is the flood of the tiger and claws of its hate and desire;
In his thought is the speed of the steed as it courses untrammelled and free,
With its sinews astrain on the plain where the winds are as wide as the sea;
But his soul is the roll of the ocean that murmurs in darkness and day,
A part of the heart of creation that lives while the ages decay.

It mounts upon wings through the rings of the night that is bright with the stars,
Till at length in its strength it has broken the chains of the flesh and its bars,
And waits for the hush and the flush of the dawn of which God is the sun;—
The dawn that will rise in the skies when the night of our warfare is done;
When Man shall behold, in the gold of the firmament passing in heat,
The face of the Proved and Beloved who descends with the stars at His feet.

Then the past shall be cast like the sand that a hand may throw out to the sea,
Shall be cast out of sight into night, and our manhood, resplendent and free,
Shall wander in dreams by the streams where the waters are silent as sleep,
Or winged on God's errands shall soar through the roar of the fathomless deep,
When the lightning is brightening our course and the thunder-clouds roll in our face,—

For the soul that is pure shall endure when the planets have crumbled in space.

Ye tempests that sweep from the deep which the night and the light overspan,
Assemble in splendour and render the praise of magnificent Man;
In his hands are the sands of the ages, and gold of unperishing youth,
On his brow, even now, is the shining of wisdom and justice and truth;
His dower was the power to prevail, on the lion and dragon he trod,
His birth was of earth but he mounts to a throne in the bosom of God.

SONNETS.

TO THE SEA.

O strange, sublime, illimitable Sea,
Majestic in thy sovran self-control,
And awful with the furious tides that roll
Round Earth's proud cliffs who bow their heads to thee;—
Thou art like God in thy vast liberty,
Thy throne is the wide world from pole to pole,
Thy thunders are Time's passing bell, and toll
The knell of all that has been, is, and is to be.

O mighty rock-bound Spirit, bright to-day,
To-morrow leaden 'neath the clouds of gloom,
Or mystic with the stars that overspan,—
Beneath thy billows, where the wild winds play,
There broods a darkness deeper than the tomb,
In caverns voiceless since the world began.

ISCARIOT.

Meek, passionless, precise, with pallid face,
 Judas grew up, his mother's constant joy,
 Who thanked Jehovah daily that her boy
Of boyhood's viciousness had not a trace.
Yet, in the heart of that which she thought grace,
 A devil lurked more subtle to destroy
 Than any other Satan doth employ
To wreak his vengeance on the human race.

In after years the man's soul grew so dead,
 That when he met Love's Self and held Love's Hand,
 Nay, kissed Love's Lips, he still could Love withstand.
Too late, the thirst which drove him to his doom
 Was quenched, when back the abhorrent daylight fled
From that lone gibbet darkening in the gloom.

MANHOOD.

With child-faith dead, and youth-dreams gone like mist,
 We stand, at noon, beneath the blazing sun
 Upon life's dusty road, our course half done.
No more we stray through woods where birds hold tryst,
Nor over mountains which the dawn hath kissed;
 In glare and heat the race must now be run
 On this blank plain, while round us, one by one,
Our friends drop out and urge us to desist.

Then from the brazen sky rings out a voice,
“Faint not, strong souls, quit you like men, rejoice,
That now like men ye bear the stress and strain,
 With eyes unbound seeing life's naked truth.
Gird up your loins, press on with might and main,
 And taste a richer wine than that of youth.”

THE HEAVEN OF LOVE.

I rose at midnight and beheld the sky
 Sown thick with stars, like grains of golden sand
 Which God had scattered loosely from His hand
Upon the floorways of His house on high;
And straight I pictured to my spirit's eye
 The giant worlds, their course by wisdom planned,
 The weary wastes, the gulfs no sight hath spanned,
And endless time for ever passing by.

Then, filled with wonder and a secret dread,
 I crept to where my child lay fast asleep,
With chubby arm beneath his golden head.
What cared I then for all the stars above?
 One little face shut out the boundless deep,
One little heart revealed the heaven of love.

LOVE'S ETERNITY.

Between the stars, the light-waves on and on Roll from the scenes of earth's past history
Unto the margins of eternity.
No day is lost of all that ever shone,
Each with its story into space hath gone
So that, to-night, some distant world may see,
Looking at earth, the Cross on Calvary,
Or the green plain and camps at Marathon.

Dear heart, whose life is woven into mine,
Who art the light and music of my days,
We move towards death, yet let us have no fear;
If nothing dies, not even light's faintest rays,
Sure that vast love which links my soul with thine
Marks for eternity our union here.

AT NIGHTFALL.

O little hands, long vanished in the night—
Sweet fairy hands that were my treasure here—
My heart is full of music from some sphere,
Where ye make melody for God's delight.
Though autumn clouds obscure the starry height,
And winds are noisy and the land is drear,
In this blank room I feel my lost love near,
And hear you playing,—hands so small and white.

The shadowy organ sings its songs again,
The dead years turn to music at its voice,
And all the dreams come back my brain did store.
Once more, dear hands, ye soothe me in my pain,
Once more your music makes my heart rejoice,—
God speed the day we clasp for evermore!

EASTER ISLAND.

There lies a lone isle in the tropic seas,—
A mountain isle, with beaches shining white,
Where soft stars smile upon its sleep by night,
And every noon-day fans it with a breeze.
Here on a cliff, carved upward from the knees,
Three uncouth statues of gigantic height,
Upon whose brows the circling sea-birds light,
Stare out to ocean, over the tall trees.

Forever gaze they at the sea and sky,
Forever hear the thunder of the main,
Forever watch the ages die away;
And ever round them rings the phantom cry
Of some lost race that died in human pain,
Looking towards heaven, yet seeing no more than they.
